William Colefoxe sneaked out of the room, and out of the house. CHAPTER XXIV. An, Mr. Ludlow, you have been rash, cried Margaret, as soon as the door was closed. You should not have struck him. I fear that evil will come of this. Oh no, answered Julian, in an absent manner. He s a coward--none but such would insult a woman--at all events he has got what he deserved, though perhaps not quite enough. If you did but know, Mr. Ludlow, how often women in my walk of life are insulted by all kinds of men, you would see that he has prescription for his justification. Hardly a day passes but we have twenty notes from people like himself, and every one an insult! The more reason that some should receive a check, replied Julian. But there will no harm happen. He is not a fighting man, depend upon it; and walking slowly to the table, he seated himself, and fell into thought; while his countenance expressed that sort of melancholy, hard disgust of the world, which like statues around tombs, commemorates the extinction of departed hopes. He spoke not--he did not even look toward Margaret, and she found it more difficult to deal with this stern sort of apathy, than she would have done with any excess of noisy grief. For a minute or two she did not know what to do; but woman ) heart always suggests some resource; and she said...
